Quick Facts

Cookson Precious Metals GW Palladium is Fusion Forged to the highest standard.

- Cookson's Palladium is a Grade I White colour that does not require Rhodium Plating
- Palladium is a Platinum Group Metal with the lowest specific gravity and melting point of the group
- Palladium is less expensive than Platinum
- Cookson's Palladium alloy contains no Nickel

Workability and Suitability

Cookson's Palladium performs similarly to Platinum; it looks and wears like Platinum, but is much lighter due to its lower specific gravity.

Marketing Opportunities with a Metal for the Future

Palladium is receiving increased attention as a bright and naturally white precious metal. Finishing costs are comparable to gold products and Palladium can be configured into many shapes and styles. Having a lower weight than Platinum means that larger pieces can be made at a price more competitive in the marketplace.

Gemstones set well into Palladium, since the metal can sustain heavy wear and shocks without cracking or becoming brittle.

Palladium's bright white colour particularly complements a diamond's 'sparkle', without the need for Rhodium plating.

GIMP: Protect silk and bead cord, and strengthen your strand with gimp.

Here's how:

- String the first three beads.
- Carefully cut about 6mm ( $\frac{1}{4}$ " ) of the Gimp and string it onto your bead cord. Next string one end of the clasp on to cord.
- Leave 100mm (4") of cord between the needle and the three beads. Thread the cord back through the first bead. The wire will form a loop on which the clasp rests.
- Tie a single knot with both cords between the first and second beads, pulling tightly to secure the knot. String and secure the second knot in the same way.
- Then string through the third bead and trim the excess. Secure each of these end knots with glue.
- String the rest of the strand. Repeat steps 1-5 on the final three beads. (Don't leave extra cord between beads at this end).

Masterclass in Fitting Watch Batteries

Let's put changing a watch battery under the eyeglass. It's a basic, bread and butter type of job, but one that should always be done professionally.

- Does it really need a battery? Use a tester to check the stepping motor isn't pulsing. If it is, but the hands are not moving, the gear train might be obstructed.
- Examine the case for its metal type and ensure you point out any damage from previous openings to the customer before proceeding. Give it a quick clean.
- Release any necessary spring bars to improve your access and open the back using a case knife and vice if necessary.
- Loosen, but don't fully remove the battery clamp if it has one – you might just lose the screw.
- Use plastic tweezers to reach the old battery. Lift the movement slightly if necessary. If you need extra room to manoeuvre, turn it to the handset position – remember to return the winding crown to its original position afterwards.
- Check if the contacts need cleaning, and loosen any dust and debris from the movement and inner case with a gentle blast of air.
- Insert the new battery as a reverse of the removal procedure.
- Check the watch is now working. Check and replace any gaskets if necessary, using sealing lubricant. Fasten the case and refit any spring bars.
- Set the watch and give it a final buff with a polishing cloth before returning it to the (hopefully) grateful customer.
